Timeless trees and botanical wonders – a green thumb's guide to South Australia's History Festival

When wondering about history, often we tie stories to man-made places and things; the structures, buildings and artefacts that offer physical proof of our journey through time.

Yet, of equal importance are the natural spaces preserved and cultivated, the parks, gardens and conservation grounds, tended lovingly by green thumbs across our state.

Shinrin-yoku – a term coined by the Japanese Ministry of Agriculture, Forestry and Fisheries in 1982 – translates approximately to 'forest bathing' and refers to the therapeutic act of simply being in nature, and particularly in the presence of trees. Offering proven cardiac benefits, regulation of hormones and the immune system – a measurable boost to general wellbeing, what more reason could we possibly need to get out and amongst the natural wonders of our state?
